Proposition of the Court of the Court

But they are foreigners and most of them of an other denomination and strangers and afar off—and we have already many cle ms on us. I have an editor (the old United States Jour and we have already many cle ms on us. I have not put read in my Habir, the parable of the good Sn maritah, and to tell the truth, that parable aggent and the thought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal, and to consider the shought of making this appeal.

Could they but ait and watch the atorm tome dristing over the wested form, With no defeate—no robe to apread In pity round by fevered head,

Oh could they see the eyes they love, In tears turned pheadingly above, I know they could not quite forage bome pity for our hepeful weet.
